National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment
Snow showers have continued to affect parts of Lincolnshire and east Yorkshire overnight and are likely to extend into the east Midlands and perhaps Norfolk. This may lead to icy stretches on untreated surfaces. Snow showers may also begin to affect parts of Kent through the morning rush hour. A slight covering of snow is likely in places. The snow showers should largely die out during the morning.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 15:00 on Thu, 02nd Feb 2012 until 11:00 on Fri, 03rd Feb 2012

Some untreated roads are expected to be icy in parts of eastern England and the east Midlands for the rest of the night and into this morning, in particular where snow showers have occurred overnight. The public are advised that some travel disruption may result.
